Richardson, a founder of the International Society for Electroanaesthesia, built working sleep machines four years ago but until this year neither he nor anyone else in the world really knew how they worked. Then he discovered that the signal--a 700-cycles per-second sine wave form--blocks nerve impulses at the synapse. That is a connector in the nervous system's transmission chain.

Winkler put this new-found knowledge to work in his portable. It can be used for total anaesthesia, with electrodes attached to the skull, or locally, with attachments placed to block off part of a leg or arm.

J. J. Heger, president of the Stoelting Co., a Chicago instrument firm, flew down to Carbondale to check out Winkler's electrode harness. He bought that, and then Ed showed him the portable ZZZ machine. He snapped that up, too.

Both projects are under the aegis of the SIU Foundation, which encourages campus inventions, takes care of patenting and legal service, and shares royalties with inventors. Stoelting will pay the Foundation a down payment plus a percentage of gross sales for manufacturing rights.

Richardson figures that if the Army decides to buy, after testing a hand-built version, "Winkler could make a pretty good buck."

And if Richardson keeps teaching the course, Stoelting and the SIU Foundation may have to take up house-keeping. A woman in the class invented a board that allows experimenters to position dogs on their sides for laboratory work, a more natural and comfortable attitude than the usual flat-on-the-back position. Stoelting plans to market it.

Another SIU invention soon to go into production under Stoelting is a microwave detection counter of Richardson's. Workers around microwave installations like radar can carry the gimmick in their pockets. It will give them a warning beep when emission doses approach danger levels.

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --A onetime Hamilton County public school teacher who has held a half dozen administrative posts at Southern Illinois University is the first executive vice president for SIU at Carbondale.

Vice Chancellor Willis E. Malone assumed the job Wednesday (Sept. 1) at the same time Chancellor Robert G. Layer became president.

Changes in the two executive titles came at the end of an "interim" reorganization year and reflect newly-recognized autonomy for SIU at Carbondale.

SIU has had vice presidents before but chiefly in defined administrative areas such as business, planning, and academic affairs.

Malone's position spans all those parts of campus activity and also carries delegated executive responsibility for the president's duties when he is away from campus.

Malone, 59, will be no stranger to the task. Since coming to SIU in 1939 as a supervising teacher in a rural "practice school," he has been at various times director of rural in-service training program, assistant dean of the College of Education, director of admissions, chief of party for SIU's first teacher training mission in South Vietnam, vice presidential assistant for academic affairs, and acting chancellor.

He held the last post during the summer of 1970 after Robert MacVicar resigned to become president of Oregon State University. He asked relief to return to academic duties and was immediately named vice chancellor under Layer.

He was born in the farm community of Thackeray, near McLeansboro, to Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Malone. His father, now dead, taught in Hamilton County and McLeansboro schools besides tending a farm. His mother, Mrs. Mattie Malone, still lives in McLeansboro.

Malone started at SIU as a student in 1930, won his two-year teaching certificate, and taught seven years in his home county before returning to SIU as a supervisor at Pleasant Grove, a rural practice school. It was operated as part of SIU's rural education department, which no longer exists.

He received his bachelor's degree in 1940, then went to Northwestern to finish a master's degree (elementary education) the next year.

Back at SIU as director of rural in-service teaching programs, Malone directed a 30-minute Friday afternoon radio program from the stage of Shryock Auditorium. Its target audience included teachers at "key schools" regarded as training models in each of the Southern Illinois counties.

Nineteen years later, he was to direct something like it when he headed up an elementary education mission on the other side of the world. The SIU team, first of its kind in South Vietnam, established an in-service teacher training center, almost completely changed the old, traditional French method of classroom lectures to embrace more teacher-student contact and community projects, and helped write new textbooks for South Vietnam grade school teachers-in-training.

The Malone team worked in South Vietnam for three years and on his return he was named assistant for academic affairs to the vice president. In 1968 he was sent on a round-the-world trip to inspect all SIU's overseas contract missions.

Malone, who received a Ph.D. from Ohio State University in 1950, is usually at his desk before SIU's 8 a.m. working day begins, and he is more often than not still there when secretaries begin leaving at 5 p.m.

Office visitors range from academic deans, visiting officials and educators (a recent guest: dean of the School of Journalism at Moscow University) to troubled students and anxious parents.

His chief avocations are golf (mid 80's "on a good round"), flower gardening and traveling.

Malone is strong on undergraduate education and hopes that SIU's designation as one of the state's two predominately graduate institutions (with the U of I) doesn't diminish its freshmen-sophomore programs.

"The larger universities, given resources, have much more flexibility to experiment with new undergraduate teaching methods than do smaller schools. And it is for the student, after all, that we exist."

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --Undergraduate students at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale will have little excuse for not doing outside reading assignments hereafter--they will have their own easily accessible undergraduate library, starting with the fall quarter.

A 40,000-item collection of materials geared to undergraduate studies--books, monographic materials, periodicals, topographic reference material, indexes, vertical files (pamphlets, flyers, leaflets) and newspapers--has been assembled and installed on the first floor of Morris Library, adjoining the general circulation desk.

A large study lounge area with colorful comfortable chairs and divans is provided. Seating capacity of the reading rooms is 515. Most of the seating is at tables for four, but 50 individual enclosures are available, as well as a room for group study, a typing room with a half dozen pay-as-you-use typewriters plus tables for bring-your-own-portable.

A large section for reserve books--a rotating collection of items temporarily in great demand because of certain class assignments--is a self-service operation, but has its own check-out desk. Ordinarily, books may be checked out for three weeks, but here books may be placed on reserve by faculty members for two-hour, three-day or seven-day use, as required.

Another section of the undergraduate library houses a microfilm collection and a battery of microfilm readers, as well as a "reader printer," a machine that makes a print-out of a segment of microfilm if the student wants it.

Copiers are installed at strategic points in the library, so that students may quickly obtain copies of portions of library material instead of making laborious notes for future study.

A staff of five professional reference librarians supported by clerical and student assistants will man the new facility, according to Clayton Highum, librarian in charge.

-2- Undergraduate library

Hightum emphasized that undergraduates will continue to have free access to the other libraries--education, humanities, science and social studies--if they need more specialized information.

"This collection has been built up to make it easier and more convenient for the undergraduate to find what he needs," he said. "After all, 85 per cent of our 24,000 student population are undergraduates. This collection will make the library resources they need more readily accessible to them."

Graduate students and faculty too may use the materials in the undergraduate library, he added, but they may not exercise the privilege they enjoy in the other collections of checking out books for more than three weeks. "This is not a research collection, so they should not need longer use of the materials," Hightum explained.

Current journals, magazines and newspapers will be available in the study lounge, Hightum added, while back files will be kept on the open shelves or, in the cases of some journals, on microfilm.

Hightum joined the Morris Library staff in 1969, assigned to develop the undergraduate collection. He had previously served as director of libraries at Parkland College, Champaign, Ill., as head of public services, Florida Atlantic University, Boca Raton, Fla., and as research assistant in the University of Illinois Library School.

A native of Fargo, North Dakota, Hightum received his bachelor's degree from Mayville State, Mayville, N.Dak., the master's degree in library science from the University of Illinois and a master of science degree from St. Cloud State, St. Cloud, Minn.

Generally, farmers with beef or dairy cattle herds plan to convert part of their corn crop, or a field of forage sorghum or sudan-grass into silage at this season of the year. Southern Illinois University farm safety specialist J.J. Paterson at Carbondale passes along some reminders to such farmers about the dangers that are encountered in filling a silo or opening up one that is filled when starting to feed silage to the animals. The upright type silos are most dangerous to the careless farmer, he says.

Having plenty of ventilation when entering an upright silo, either during the filling operation or after it is full, is essential to remove harmful gases that are formed in the silo.

Nitrogen oxide and carbon dioxide are two silo gases most likely to be present. Either one can kill a careless person who enters a partly filled silo or who opens one of the airtight silo units that now are common on cattle farms. Both gases are heavier than air and will collect in a partly filled silo or flow down the chute when a filled silo is opened for feeding. They are products of the silage forming process.

The nitrogen oxide is formed from nitrates or other nitrogen containing materials in the chopped forages changing to a gas. It is irritating to the throat and lungs when breathed in and is responsible for what often is called "silo filler's disease." At concentrations of 100 parts per million it can be seen as a yellowish-brown gas, but the substance is harmful to man even at concentrations of only five parts per million.

If a person has a slight feeling of illness or a burning sensation in the throat after entering a silo, he should get out immediately and go to a physician for treatment, even if the ill feeling disappears after getting out of the silo. Lung congestion caused by irritation from the gas may develop a day or two later and require administration of oxygen for breathing.

Carbon dioxide is an invisible gas produced in silage making, especially in modern airtight silos. It will suffocate an unwary person entering an unventilated silo so quickly he will not be able to get out.

Paterson offers these safety practices for silo filling.

1. Keep the blower of the filling machine running while a person is working in the silo. If filling has been stopped for a time, operate the blower for several minutes before re-entering the silo to force out noxious gases.

2. After the silo is full, stay out of it for two weeks or so while the newly chopped forage is going through the silage forming process. When entering a silo have another person nearby to lend assistance or sound an alarm for help in case of an accident.

3. When opening a silo, whether airtight or other upright type, to start removing the silage for feeding, keep the chute and any connecting doors of a building open to allow ventilation for the trapped gas as it flows out of the silo. Livestock and children should be kept away from the immediate vicinity of the silo until the gas has had time to dissipate.

4. Trained silo servicemen ought to be used for entering an airtight silo for equipment repairs or other maintenance work. Some type of oxygen-supplying equipment is suggested for use when working in an airtight silo.

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --Checking out books to 23,000 resident students is not the only function the Morris Library at Southern Illinois University performs--it also serves scholar-clients around the globe.

During the last fiscal year, for example, it has filled nearly 10,000 requests for loan materials--books, photocopies or microfilm--to be used by scholars in Cuba, Rhodesia and Canada, among other distant points.

These requests--24,347 of them during fiscal 1970-71--are funneled through an operation called Interlibrary Loans, headed by Harold Rath. Each request must come through another university or public library or a special library. SIU filled 9,958 of last year's requests, Rath said.

SIU is one of four research and reference library centers in Illinois (the others are the University of Illinois, the Illinois State Library and the Chicago Public Library), which form a network connected by teletype. Of last year's requests, 15,044 were channeled from one or the other of these centers. But 3,845 came from other university and special libraries, coast to coast, Hawaii and Alaska, and even from London and Switzerland.

In return, to fill the needs of its own students, the Morris Library sent out 5,502 queries to other libraries for materials not in its own collections, Rath said.

An unusual request Rath recalled came from a Northern Illinois system library for a book by Ira Ferguson, entitled "I Dug Graves by Night to Attend College by Day."

One of the most frequently requested items, he said, is a 1967 SIU master's thesis in home economics--"Relationships Between Certain Personality Traits and Clothing Preferences," by Bonnie Marie Eaglin. Another SIU home economics thesis, "A Study of Buying Habits of Low Income Homemakers in Montgomery, Alabama, with Suggestions for Improvement," by Shirley Crawford (1968), is runner-up.

SIU COUNTRY COLUMN

By Albert Meyer

Late September and October are suggested times for planting or replanting the bulbs and tubers of early spring flowering plants, according to Gerald Coorts, Southern Illinois University floriculturist at Carbondale. In areas such as Southern Illinois it is best to delay bulb planting until the ground temperature has cooled slightly from summer heat, permitting the bulbs to establish roots before freezing weather, but not to vernalize or "bolt" the flower and plant growth in the bulb too soon.

This same period also is a good time for digging up overcrowded bunches of peonies and irises for thinning and replanting or relocating to get larger and healthier blossoms next spring, he says. Old beds of such flowering bulbs as the tulip, hyacinth, narcissus and daffodil, lily, crocus, and similar flowers that need relocating or thinning may be dug up during the summer after the foliage has dried, then cleaned, sorted, and stored in a cool, dry place (temperatures somewhere between 50 and 70 degrees) until planting time in October.

Digging and dividing large clumps of bulbs improves the quality and size of the flowers in the spring. Replanting also permits new locations and arrangements for adding to the beauty of the spring flower garden. Most bulbs should be planted around shrubbery and other perennial plants, or in flower garden areas where summer flowering annuals can be planted to follow the spring flowers with a succession of blossoms.

Most bulbs in climatic areas such as Southern Illinois need not be dug up each year for replanting. They may be left two or three years, or until the flowers lose size and vigor. Generally it is desirable to discard the smaller bulbs and all those that seem diseased or show signs of decay. The larger bulbs will produce the larger flowers.

The bulbs of crocus, galanthus (snowdrop), grape hyacinth (muscari), and others having small bulbs or corms give a better display if planted close together (so the bulbs almost touch each other) in clumps of at least 25 bulbs, or as borders for flower beds or shrubs. These bulbs may be planted about 4 inches deep in good soil that does not pack. Heavy soils should have some humus material and sand mixed in to make it more workable and easier for the bulb shoots to emerge in the spring.

Larger bulbs, such as those of tulips, hyacinths, lilies and narcissus, require somewhat deeper planting and more space between the bulbs. In rather rich, loose soils the bulbs may be planted from five to six inches deep, depending somewhat on the bulb size, and six to eight inches apart to allow room for forming new bulbs in the following two or three years until replanting time. If the soil tends to pack down and become hard, add humus material or plant the bulbs more shallow. Arrange bulbs in clumps rather than rows to improve the spring floral display.

In thinning and dividing peonies, dig up old clumps carefully to avoid tearing off too many of the fibrous roots attached to the tubers because these supply the plant with nutrients and moisture from the soil. After digging, wash soil from the clump of roots and tubers for better dividing before replanting. Select as many of the largest and healthiest as desired for the garden and replant deep enough to cover all the tubers. The surplus may be discarded or given to friends desiring them.

Irises also need to be taken up, divided, and replanted every few years to keep the blossoms large. The rhizomes propagate rather rapidly by forming new ones from the side each year to provide shoots for next year's blossoms. Roots extend into the soil from the bottom of the rhizomes. In digging and dividing, remove the older rhizomes from which past blossoms have come and save the larger rhizomes with the healthiest shoots for replanting in the same or new beds, and discard the rest. Make the planting hole large and deep enough to receive the cluster of roots adequately, pack dirt firmly around the roots, but avoid burying the rhizomes. The top of the iris rhizomes should be exposed slightly at the surface of the soil to guard against decay.

Most kinds of day lilies are hardy and easy to propagate and plant. They need thinning out by digging up every few years and discarding some of the tubers. Lilies of the Madonna type have fresh roots coming from the bulbs that cannot withstand much air drying, so these need to be replanted immediately after being taken from the old bed. They will do best if planted less than six inches deep.

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --Clarence W. Stephens, former vice president in charge of the Edwardsville campus of Southern Illinois University, has elected to retire, October 1, after 36 years in Illinois schools.

For the past year Stephens has served in one of SIU's high administrative posts as chairman of the University Administrative Council. Previously, he had been the University budget officer, was a special assistant to President D.W. Morris, and for three months in 1970 was a special assistant to the chancellor of the Carbondale campus. He was vice-president for operations at SIU-Edwardsville for three years beginning in 1961.

As Council chairman, Stephens headed a group composed of two vice presidents, two chancellors and the chief of board staff. The Council was established by the SIU Board of Trustees when Morris became president emeritus in September, 1970. As chairman, Stephens was in reality temporary head to the University during the transitional year when the campuses at Carbondale and Edwardsville were largely desegregated while remaining under one board.

Although only 59, Stephens now is eligible--with his 36 years of service--for benefits which otherwise would not have been available until he was 60. In addition to long-delayed travel, he may do some work as a consultant. He has been asked by some members of the SIU Board to be available for special assignments.

Harold R. Fischer, chairman of the SIU Board, said today, "With the retirement of Clarence Stephens, SIU loses a highly competent man whose unusual abilities have earned for him professional recognition and respect throughout Illinois. In his quiet but forceful manner he has responded repeatedly and successfully when his assistance was needed in critical situations. It will be most fortunate if he is available as a consultant."

Stephens was graduated from SIU in 1933. He earned a master's degree at the University of Illinois and a doctor of education degree at Indiana University. (MORE)

A native of Sparta, his early years as an Illinois educator were as teacher, coach and principal at high schools in Sparta, Carlyle, Ziegler, Plano and Metropolis. He came to SIU in 1952 as an instructor at University School. He was the University's first director of student work and financial assistance, one of the nation's leading programs of this type and now directed by Frank C. Adams, also a Sparta native.

Stephens and Adams are co-authors of two books, "College and University Student Work Programs: Implications and Implementations" and a soon to be published volume, "A Student Job Classification Plan for College and Universities." Stephens also is co-author with others of "Secondary Education."

Once a prominent area and SIU athlete, Stephens' first love is teaching, and he responded reluctantly when drafted repeatedly as an administrative "trouble shooter." He is known to have refused offers of high administrative posts which would have taken him away permanently from classroom teaching.

He was chairman of an Illinois Board of Higher Education Committee on demography and location of new senior institutions and was editor and a major contributor to the committee's report.

Mrs. Stephens is the former Justine Tomlinson of Carbondale, also an SIU graduate. They have two daughters, Beverly, now Mrs. Alden Ray, whose husband is a research metallurgist in Dayton, Ohio, and Barbara, Mrs. David Johnson, whose husband is in the SIU Graduate School. The Rays have four children, Mike, the oldest, is starting to college this year.

IT'S HAPPENING IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

No. 35-71 (About people, places and events in Southern Illinois, by Pete Brown of the Southern Illinois University News Service.)

A team of seven young archaeologists has dug up 38 Indian skeletons in shallow graves less than a mile from Ft. de Chartres, near Prairie du Rocher.

This is the site, as described here before, where Irvin Peithmann said a village of Michigamea Indians existed more than 200 years ago, at a time when the French ruled this part of America.

Peithmann--SIU Outdoor Laboratory researcher who has become known as the "Davey Crockett of archaeology"--first important link in a chain of discoveries and deductions that may lead to the complete reconstruction of French-British occupation sites in the area.

Spurred by his discoveries, Mrs. Margaret Brown of Michigan State University got a grant from the Illinois Department of Conservation to do some digging.

She and her crew--two other collegiate field assistants and five Prairie du Rocher teenagers--began scraping dirt on Aug. 16. There is no telling how many gravesites they will have unearthed when the annual "Rendezvous" historical celebration is staged at Ft. Chartres Sept. 18-19. An archaeological tour will be part of the program this year.

Since the Michigamea site had been under cultivation for years, many of the skeletons--in graves no more than four feet deep--bear scars of the plow. In several cases, the tops of skulls have been sheared off.

Finds have included the skeletons of many children, some with necklaces of little brass bells hung from their necks.

Brass and silver rings, bracelets, beads and other trade goods are coming out of the graves, too, and will be added to the rapidly growing archaeological trove that has sprung from Peithmann's work.

-2- It's Happening

It appears that the artifacts date from British occupation in the 1760's, or after the Michigamea were decimated in a 1752 massacre by hostile northern tribes. No mass burial site--which could be expected from the massacre--has been uncovered.

Neither have any signs of the village itself, but Peithmann is certain that it was there, where he has long said it was. It is felt that the Michigamea probably built few if any houses on foundations that would have survived to this day.

The site is so extensive that Mrs. Brown's digs may not be completed until well into October. By then, Peithmann's reputation should be solid, indeed.

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --Frank H. Thomas, chairman of the geography department of Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, will spend a sabbatical leave during the 1971-72 school year in the Washington, D.C., area, where he will be engaged in writing and post-doctoral study.

Plans call for writing a college textbook on economic geography in collaboration with two other persons and for research on transportation problems in Washington, D.C.

Filling in for Thomas as acting chairman of the department will be Professor Douglas Carter, a climatologist who joined the geography department faculty in 1964. Carter was on the Syracuse University faculty six years before coming to SIU. His major research areas have been on climatology and water resources development. He also was one of the writers of textbook materials for high school geography and earth science curriculum projects supported by the National Science Foundation.

Thomas, a native of Chicago, joined the SIU faculty in 1960 and was appointed chairman of the geography department in 1966 to succeed Robert A. Harper, who resigned the position. He is an economic geographer, interested especially in transportation. He was an exchange teacher in economic geography at the University of Liverpool, England, during the 1962-63 school year.

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --Despite numerous obstacles, the Southern Illinois University Museum has completed its study of Peters Cave, a prehistoric rockshelter located six miles northwest of Murphysboro. It soon will be buried under the waters of the new Kincaid Lake.

First excavated in 1950-51 the site was again explored by a Museum crew in 1968, only to find that vandals had destroyed or stolen all but one of the numerous petroglyphs on the walls and the elements had badly eroded or silted the entrance to the cave.

Meanwhile, because of three moves by the Museum, including the June, 1969, fire which destroyed SIU's Old Main, records of the first exploration are incomplete.

The Museum has now published a monograph, "Archaeological Excavations at Peters Cave, Jackson County, Ill.," by Jonathan E. Reyman, field archaeologist, who conducted the 1968 project and has correlated his own findings with notes of the earlier work.

The 1950-51 project, conducted by J. Charles Kelley, Museum research coordinator, then Museum director, was halted by shortage of funds, lack of qualified personnel and other factors, but a substantial amount of material was brought back to the laboratory for cleaning, cataloging and analysis. Faunal materials were sent to Paul W. Parmalee at the Illinois State Museum, Springfield, who provided a listing of the specimens. His report is included as an appendix in the current volume.

The cave, largest of several in the immediate area, will be inundated by the 2,700 acre Kindaid Lake Recreation and Water Conservation Project.

Reyman reports that most of the petroglyphs remained on the walls of the cave as late as 1957, but "due to thievery and destruction by local vandals and relic collectors," only one remained by the time of 1968 excavation.

"Attempts had been made to cut it from its rock base but these were unsuccessful," he added. "We finally were able to remove it and now it is stored in the SIU Museum Laboratory."

"Peters Cave itself stretched in one form or another for approximately 200 meters (roughly 135 feet) along the cliff. In places the overhang formed a protective shelter area some 15 meters deep but throughout much of the area the overhang was lower and not more than 4 meters in depth.

"At the west end, the area beneath the overhang was solid rock. There was also a rock shelf here about 3 meters above the normal cave floor."

In the 1950-51 excavations, some 3,100 artifacts, one house, at least 46 pits, 10 burials and 1,700 pieces of bone and shell were recovered and brought to the Museum laboratory.

Reyman's own crew in 1968 discovered another house, 5 firepits, some 800 pieces of bone and shell, 32 charcoal samples and 41 pollen samples.

Both houses located had been built of wattle and daub, but by 1968 Reyman was able to find only one post mold to mark the spot, while the 1950 discovery revealed almost the complete outline of the walls by means of a series of post molds.

"Given the depth in the deposits at which both were found, it is reasonable to infer that the two houses were approximately contemporaneous and may well have been inhabited at the same time," Reyman wrote. "This is further supported by the similarity of the associated artifact complexes. Both were destroyed by fire, probably the same one.

"To the best of my knowledge, houses have not been discovered before in shelters in the Eastern United States or if they have been then they have not yet been reported in print. Houses within rockshelters or caves were common occurrences elsewhere, most notably in the American Southwest. But for the Eastern United States, Peters Cave represents a unique situation."

-3- Peters Cave

The 1950-51 field work turned up one other feature that is worth noting, he said. "This is a cache of an unknown number of bundles of fired grass, leaves, and other vegetable or fiber materials. They were on the same level as the house and my feeling is that they were found just outside the north wall although there is nothing in the notes that indicated this.

"Their purpose is unknown but they may have served as torches or as tinder for lighting fires. Another possibility is that they were used for lining the walls of the house before putting the mud plaster on the latticework of twigs and branches."

Reyman judges that the burial area probably dates to the late Archaic occupations, and that "Given the amount of erosion and washing away that still takes place and took place in the past, I think that one can infer a generally continuous occupation from the end of the Archaic (somewhere between 2000-1000 B.C.) through Mississippian times. This doesn't mean that the site wasn't empty for several months of the year but rather that it wasn't empty long enough so that the accumulated alluvium showed up in the stratigraphy."

The Peters Cave inhabitants of the Early and Middle Woodland period, judging from their artifacts, traded with other area people, especially groups to the south, but these contacts did not have any real effect on their cultural pattern. For example, they "imported" their pottery rather than producing it themselves.

"The fact that houses were built does not necessarily mean a change in economy or subsistence pattern," Reyman said.

"My conclusion is that Peters Cave was a cultural backwater. The end came, not because the pattern or adaptation failed, but because its manifestation burned, probably some time after A.D. 1300. Voluntarily or involuntarily, the last several generations seemed to have been out of the mainstream of cultural development in the Southern Illinois area."

Reyman's report is one of the Museum's Southern Illinois Studies in its series of Research Records. His 1968 field work was carried out with the assistance of a grant from the National Park Service.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Sept. 17 -- A tentative operations budget request for $104,886,434 to finance Southern Illinois University at Carbondale and at Edwardsville during the 1972-73 fiscal year was approved here Friday (Sept. 17) by the SIU board of trustees.

The board indicated that additional institutional and Board of Higher Education review of budget formulation guidelines is anticipated. This could result in changes in the SIU 1972-73 request.

The request presents needs for $95,159,823 from general revenue to augment an estimated $9,726,611 to be generated from university income, such as tuition and fees. Incorporated in the total request is the $10,915,011 approved by the SIU board at its August meeting to meet a September 1 deadline and which covered new, improved and expanded programs, physical plant operations and price increases.

The 104.8 million dollar figure compares with 104.3 million dollars requested a year ago to finance the current fiscal year. Deductions made by the Board of Higher Education, the Illinois Legislature and Governor Richard Ogilvie resulted in an appropriation of only $77,528,960 for the current year.

The 1972-73 request asks $68,250,229 for SIU at Carbondale and $36,636,205 for SIU at Edwardsville. A summary sheet breakdown, by subject headings required in BHE accounting procedures, is as follows:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Sept. 17 --Southern Illinois University will tighten in-state residency requirements for tuition and registration purposes starting with the winter term beginning in January.

New residency regulations approved here Friday (Sept. 17) by the SIU board of trustees conform largely to similar changes being made at other state schools.

In line with recently-adopted legislation, the regulations re-define an "adult" student as one 18 years old or above.

Adult students with parents living outside the state must prove residency in Illinois for 12 months in order to qualify for in-state tuition. Present requirements are three months.

Richard Gruny, legal counsel for the board, said major changes in the regulations are those proposed by a committee of the Illinois Joint Council on Higher Education. They are, in addition to the 12 months rule: An adult student whose parents reside in Illinois will be treated as a resident even if he has been living elsewhere, and a student living in Illinois and married to an Illinois resident will qualify as a resident. These residency regulations have nothing to do with voting requirements Gruny pointed out.

A new rule allows resident status to any servicemen stationed in Illinois. The same privilege is extended to his family. Residency starts with duty assignment.

Voter registration, filing of taxes, driver's license and vehicle registration and similar transactions are cited as verification of "bona fide" residency. Length of attendance at SIU or continued presence in the community during vacation periods will not be construed as proof of residency qualifications, according to the new regulations.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Sept. 17 --Plans for upgrading football stadium facilities on the campus of Southern Illinois University at Carbondale were presented to SIU's board of trustees at a meeting in Springfield Friday.

The board took no action on the proposals, one to renovate existing McAndrew Stadium and the other to build a new facility west of the SIU baseball diamond.

Trustees instructed the board staff to analyze the plans as well as revised athletic budget schedules for a decision at the October meeting.

Campus planner John Lonergan unveiled proposals for renovating and enlarging McAndrew Stadium, complete with artificial turf, a new communications center and enlarged seating capacity.

The existing brick grandstand would be extended upward 20 rows and steel-supported stands on the east side of the field would be cut in half and repositioned in the end zones. A new pre-fabricated concrete-on-steel stand equipped with plastic seats would be built on the east side.

Decorative facades would be constructed for the rear sides of all stands.

McAndrew Stadium now has 8,800 permanent seats. Lonergan said renovation to a 15,000-seat capacity would cost $1,554,679. His estimate for 20,000 seats was $1,728,061 and for 25,000 seats, $1,936,753.

New stadium proposals described by Campus Architect Willard Hart involve a three-phase project designed around a horseshoe-shaped bowl.

The first 15,000-seat stage would include concrete decks poured on sloped embankments at either side of the field. Steel stands salvaged from McAndrew Stadium would be added in a second stage, boosting capacity to 20,000 seats.

The third phase, 5,000 more seats, would be a new steel stand.

The new facility would include artificial turf, lighting system, a building for dressing rooms and service, four rest room-concession-ticket buildings and a $225,000 communications center.

-2- Stadium

Estimates ranged from $2,241,800 for the initial 15,000-seat development to $2,934,500 for the final stage.

Tied in with the stadium presentations were budget figures presented by President Robert G. Layer indicating a need to find new sources of financing athletics and the student Health Service.

A $344,996 allocation for student activities in the coming academic year includes no funds for either.

Instead, Layer held back $387,000 of the total $731,996 student activities budget until a determination is made on how to best support athletics and the Health Service in a tightening austerity period.

SIU students pay a $10.50 Student Activities Fee each quarter. In the past, $4.15 of that has been earmarked for the Health Service and $1.52 for men's and women's athletics. Some 61 different campus organizations and activities receive the rest. Theirs were the allocations approved Friday.

Athletics also receives funds from a $10 quarterly student Athletic Fee and from state appropriations for salaries.

Of the $10 fee, seven dollars has been going into a stadium development fund, which now totals $1,600,000. Last month Layer ordered payments into that fund stopped pending budget reappraisals that have followed campus-wide cutbacks.

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --Two new publications, one on users of parks and recreational areas in Southern Illinois, and one on properties of hickory particleboard, are being issued by the Southern Illinois University forestry department at Carbondale. Both report the results of research projects carried on by forestry faculty members and graduate students.

Issued as Department of Forestry Publication No. 6 in the SIU School of Agriculture is "A Look at Visitors to the Parks and Recreation Areas to be Connected by the Proposed George Rogers Clark Scenic Drive in Southern Illinois." Authors are Dwight R. McCurdy, SIU associate professor of forestry, and Glenn R. Marlow of Herrin, former graduate assistant working with McCurdy on the study.

Department of Forestry Publication No. 7 is "Properties of All-Hickory Particleboard," written by Ali A. Moslemi, associate professor; and former graduate assistant Thomas E. Berchem of Steger (Ill.) who helped conduct the research.

For their study McCurdy and Marlow used about 1400 completed questionnaires obtained from persons visiting parks and recreation areas along the proposed Scenic Drive across Southern Illinois. The information was obtained in 1969-70.

Some of their findings are: Most user-groups were families, generally on weekend visits and living less than 50 miles from the recreation area; nearly two-thirds were campers and repeat visitors to the area; and sightseeing was the most popular activity. Persons on annual vacations were most likely to use the Forest Service lake-oriented recreation spots in the area. The state parks and Forest Service scenic areas with lesser varieties of recreational opportunities received mostly day use. Camping groups averaged spending $6.62 per visit while expenditures of non-camping groups were 93 cents.

Most visitors were not familiar with the proposed George Rogers Clark Scenic Drive but nearly 90 per cent favored the idea because they thought it would stimulate the local economy or provide better access to existing areas. They also thought it would bring about an increase in the capacity, facilities, and services of the parks and recreation areas.

-2- Forestry publications

Moslemi and Berchem tested the strength and surface properties of particleboard panels made from hickory wood flakes. Moslemi says hickory wood currently is used mainly by the turning industry--for handle stock--and some for charcoal. Their studies are aimed at increasing market possibilities for the area's plentiful supplies of low quality hickory timber and the waste materials from the turning industry. So far particleboard makers are staying away from such high density woods as hickory because it is hard on their cutting machinery, especially the flaking equipment, and they believe particleboard from such materials lacks strength.

Moslemi and Berchem used three different lengths of particles and four panel densities in their studies, using urea resin as a binder for the material. Panels were tested for surface smoothness, bending strength, tensile and pressure strength, and reaction to water exposure. They found the hickory particleboard in medium densities (from 42 to 45 pounds per cubic foot) had plenty of bending strength for commercial consideration, but did not stand up under exposure to water. Adding sizing as a catalyst to the binding material would improve the internal bonding and overcome the adverse reaction to water, Moslemi says.

Surface smoothness without sanding can be obtained by increasing the density of the board, using smaller wood particles, or raising the moisture content at the surface during processing. Moslemi suggests that particleboard makers likely will be using mixtures of hardwood, hopefully including hickory where supplies are plentiful, in manufacturing as the demand for particleboard increases.

IT'S HAPPENING IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

(About people, places and events in Southern Illinois, by Pete Brown
of the Southern Illinois University News Service.)

Late in 1865 some geologists working in Greenland discovered a silicate mineral unlike anything they'd ever seen. Because it defied immediate description they named it aenigmatite, from Latin and Greek roots that give us the word "enigma"--mysterious, puzzling, etc.

Crystallography was in its infacy then and all efforts to classify aenigmatite failed. No one could figure out its puzzling molecular structure.

Even after the discovery of x-ray techniques in 1912, aenigmatite remained an enigma. But lately the whole field of "structural discovery" in minerals has exploded with the advent of computers and diffraction devices. A year or so ago the prestigious Cambridge University crystallography group of D. McKie undertook the task of trying to unravel the molecular secrets of this century-old piece of Greenland.

After a year they gave up. McKie sent the stuff to Jen-Ho Fang, head of the crystallographic research laboratory in Southern Illinois University's geology department.

After nine months, pounds of computer cards and maybe miles of computer tape, Fang and his associate Paul Robinson cracked the aenigmatite riddle. It was one of four discoveries chalked up by the SIU group in the past year.

It's all sort of esoteric business to the layman, but to the experts, SIU's x-ray diffraction laboratory is probably the best in the state and, for what it does (minerals structure research) ranks with the biggies like UCLA.

The discovery process starts with a dust-sized speck of crystal which is rotated in an x-ray beam. The intensity of the resulting diffractions is measured on a radiation counter. Then it gets into mathematics, computer predictions and all that.

For the aenigmatite investigation, Fang and Robinson used 2,582 reflections, that is, x-y-z coordinates to four decimal places. (MORE)

-2- It's Happening

Virtually all crystal structures have a molecular pattern that repeats itself over and over, like wallpaper. The SIU group discovered that aenigmatite had a "pseudo structure," a freaky occurrence that popped up intermittently in the pattern. The freak is what had everybody baffled for all those years.

Other discoveries out of the $100,000 SIU lab have included the structures of endidymite (sodium beryllium silicate), mendozite (sodium-aluminum-sulphate-hydrate) and kainite (potassium-magnesium-sulphate-hydrate). The latter is a source of potassium mined in the west.

Much of the work, is done with precious and semi-precious stones, and some of these are cooked up in the lab itself, combining oxides in a 1,400 degree centigrade furnace and letting the molten mass cool slowly at one degree per hour--a re-enactment of what went on during the earth's fiery beginnings.

It's fortunate that Fang and Co. don't need much material, working at a level where only x-rays and radiation counters can tell what's going on.

Diamonds? Cheap merchandise. One structure they've worked on is that of alexandrite, a little old jewel of a gemstone that would cost you $1,000 a carat if you could get it at Tiffany's.

IT'S TIME TO REBUILD
THAT OLD LAWN

SIU COUNTRY COLUMN
By Albert Meyer

Now is a desirable time of year to renovate a rundown lawn or start a new one, according to James A. Tweedy, turf specialist at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale.

Persons rebuilding an old lawn or starting a new one should be concerned with providing a good seedbed, selecting and planting a desirable variety of grass for the lawn, and fertilizing according to needs. In either instance, it is a good idea to take soil samples from several parts of the lawn area (with a soil probe or a tile spade to a depth of six or eight inches) and have them analyzed to find out the lime and fertilizer needs of the lawn.

If the soil is acid with a pH level of about 5, and the potassium and phosphorus content is low, suggested fertility treatments are 200 pounds of agricultural lime and 20 pounds of 10-10-10 or 12-12-12 analysis commercial fertilizer on each 1,000 square feet of lawn (a 10-by-100-foot area). If the lawn is less acid and shows a suitable level of potassium and phosphorus, the homeowner should consider a fertilizer mixture with a higher percentage of nitrogen than of the other two nutrients.

On new lawns the fertilizer and lime should be mixed into the soil before it is worked up and seeded. In renovation, apply the fertilizer over the entire lawn and work up the bare spots or weedy areas with a rototiller or some hand-digging tool to prepare a good seedbed. Rake the rest of the lawn vigorously to remove matted grass clippings, dead grass, and other undesirable vegetation to give the lawn grass a better chance to make new shoots and regain healthy growth. If the soil tends to pack down and be short of humus, work some rotted sawdust, old barnyard manure, dried sludge from sewage treatment plants, or similar material into the cultivated parts of the lawn to increase the organic matter content and make the soil more friable for working.

Turf grass specialists suggest a good quality Kentucky bluegrass for seeding lawns in Southern Illinois, but other grasses also are suggested, depending on personal desires and the condition of the lawn. Bluegrass may go dormant during hot, dry summer days, especially in August or early September, but it will revive with cooler weather in the fall and remain green most of the winter. It is especially vigorous in spring and early summer when moisture is abundant. Watering and keeping the lawn well-fertilized will keep bluegrass green most of the summer.

Zoysia or improved bermudagrass make a thick sod and are more tolerant to heat than bluegrass. They will compete well with most grasses and weeds but have the disadvantage of turning brown in the fall and starting growth late in the spring. These usually are started from sprigs or plugs of the grass transplanted to the lawn.

Alta or Kentucky 31 tall fescue may be used on poorer lawn soils, especially in hard use areas, because these are hardy and resist wear. The grasses are more coarse than bluegrass and some of the other lawn grasses and they may tend to bunching. Heavy seeding is suggested to provide a more even sod cover.

Most persons have problems with crabgrass and chickweed in lawns. The best way to control these is to apply recommended herbicides pre-emergence in the spring before the weed grasses germinate--about April or early May for crabgrass control. Other broadleaf weeds (and chickweed, too), such as plaintain and dandelion, can be eliminated from the lawn by spot spraying the weeds with recommended post-emergence herbicides. Having a thick sod of lawngrass that grows vigorously will crowd out most weeds and weedy grasses without much herbicide use.

Newly seeded areas of the lawn may be mulched lightly with hay or straw and kept moist by watering during dry fall weather to hasten seed germination and to assure the new grass will become established with a good root system.

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --A workshop designed to provide answers to questions about teaching environment issues from kindergarten through high school will be held Oct. 8-9 at Southern Illinois University's Outdoor Laboratory on Little Grassy Lake near Carbondale.

Harry Miller of the SIU department of secondary education said the workshop has been prompted by the demand for greater social responsibility in the care of the environment and the fact that new state legislation requires elementary and secondary schools to incorporate environmental issues into the curriculum. Miller and Paul F. Nowak, chairman of the department of conservation and outdoor education, are co-chairmen of the workshop planning committee.

The program will get under way at 10:15 a.m. Oct. 8 following welcoming remarks by Dean Elmer J. Clark. Most workshop staff members are from the SIU College of Education but a visiting speaker will be James Spears of the Office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction. Dean Paul Yambert of the SIU Outdoor Laboratories also will be on the program.

The workshop will end Oct. 9 with a debriefing and evaluation session and lunch at 11:30 a.m.

Miller said participants are encouraged to bring samples of projects, units, or exhibits which they have used in their classrooms. Display space will be available.

The registration fee is $15 for the workshop, or $6 for Friday only or $4 for Saturday. Registration should be made with SIU Extension and Adult Education at Carbondale by Oct. 1.

SIU COUNTRY COLUMN

By Albert Meyer

It is important that farmers getting into their corn and soybean harvests have the combine or corn harvester in tiptop running condition to avoid unnecessary and costly breakdowns in the field and to do a good harvesting job, according to J. J. Paterson, Southern Illinois University farm mechanization specialist at Carbondale.

Having the harvesting machine in good shape means repairing or replacing worn and broken parts, paying special attention to driving chains and v-belts, before the equipment goes to the field. Having the machinery well lubricated also is essential. The engine will operate more efficiently if it is properly tuned.

With the machinery in good shape, adjusting the combine to the crop and field conditions and driving at the right speed for a good harvesting job is especially important to cut down on grain damage and field losses. He suggests starting by checking the cylinder speed, using the equipment manual to adjust for the crop being harvested. Also adjust the concave spacing close enough to get all the soybeans out of the pod or the grain from the corn ears but avoid adjusting so closely that the grain will be cracked and damaged so much the selling price may be docked on delivery to market.

Cylinder adjustments are about the same for light weight or poor quality grain as for good grades, but the speed of the cleaning fan needs to be adjusted to the size and weight of the grain, slowing down for light weight grain to avoid blowing excessive amounts out of the machine with the discharge material. Screens and threshing racks also need to be adjusted to crop conditions.

In harvesting soybeans, the operator should lower the cutting bar as much as field conditions will permit to be sure to retrieve all the bean pods possible on the lower part of the plants and to salvage lodged bean plants. The reel speed should be just fast enough to get the material on the delivery platform to avoid increasing field losses from shattered bean pods or from part of the material being thrown over or under the platform.

In harvesting corn it is important that the spacing of the corn heads on the harvester or combine match as near as possible the planter row spacing. This is especially helpful if there are fallen corn stalks as may occur this year in fields suffering from stalkrot or fungus diseases. With good matching of cornheads and row spaces the farmer finds it easier to do a good harvesting job and have less trouble with clogging the machine. It is important that the snapping rollers and bars in the machine be in top condition.

Paterson suggests the farmer needs to check on field losses during harvesting as soon as he gets started and to make periodic checks afterward, if field or crop conditions change, in various localities of the field to make certain he is doing a good job. Field losses may be computed by noting the number of grains of soybeans or kernels of corn (including parts of ears of corn) per square foot behind the cutting frame and in the discharge area behind the combine. A farmer ought to aim at keeping harvesting losses of corn or soybeans at less than 3 per cent of the crop. Spending a little extra time in keeping the harvester in good adjustment for the crop conditions will save the farmer a lot of problems with volunteer corn showing up next year in his new soybean or corn field.

In weedy or lodged corn and soybeans, or when the crop is rank and producing high yields, a better harvesting job can be done by reducing the ground speed of the combine.

IT'S HAPPENING IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

No. 37-71 (About people, places and events in Southern Illinois, by Pete Brown
of the Southern Illinois University News Service.)

Late Friday afternoon, Sept. 17, a faculty member noticed two pieces of sculpture missing from their display pedestals in a corridor of Morris Library at Southern Illinois University.

One of them was called "Pioneer," the other, "Woodsman." Three companion pieces-- "Lincoln," "Hunter" and "Coal Miner" remained untouched and intact. A loss alert went to the SIU Security Police and by the following Wednesday, "Pioneer" had been recovered. The next day a theft suspect was under questioning.

While the two walnut carvings wouldn't rank on the art market, dollarwise, with such University-owned sculptures as the $30,000 Bourdelle or the $10,000 Noguchi, their disappearance caused as much stir around SIU at Carbondale as if they had been Rodins or Cellinis.

"Pioneer," "Woodsman" and the rest are works that came to life in the big, muscular hands of Fred Meyers, a former West Frankfort area coal miner whose gift was entirely and remarkably his own. He went through grade school and two years of high school (West Frankfort) but until his death in 1950, at age 40, he never had an hour's training in the art he mastered so well.

When Meyers was a child, he used to draw uncommonly well, his friends and family thought, and until the depression he also painted with oils. Then, with painting money scarce, he began to carve things out of wood.

People gave him carving tools and he had some of his own, but he preferred to use a heavy ax and pocket knife. His material, almost exclusively, was green walnut stumps. Friends and admirers of Meyers' would dig them up and bring them to him, because despite his size (6-2, heavyset), Meyers was burdened by a rupture that followed an appendectomy. He couldn't lift big things.

Meyers would shape stumps and parts of their roots with the ax, then work out the final forms with his knife. He also worked with cherry stumps.

In the Depression years of WPA, Fred Meyers got a job at the SIU Museum, under the Federal Arts Project. It was here that the late John Allen--then curator--recognized his exceptional skill and encouraged Meyers to go ahead and do Museum display figures in his own way--walnut and cherry carvings--instead of the customary plaster of papier mache.

He did six figures representing the evolution of the horse; he carved prehistoric reptiles in walnut miniatures; he shaped Thomas Jefferson, Lincoln, Grant.

By using tree stumps, he was able to preserve striking grain features. He finished his pieces with oil, then wax, the classic way.

Years after Meyers' death, SIU sculpture professor Milton Sullivan was to see his figures and say: "The skill, craftsmanship and technique is that of a sculptor who thoroughly understands the material he is working with. There is a constant respect for the innate qualities of the wood--mass, color, grain, rhythmic feeling."

The SIU Museum at Carbondale owns approximately 25 Fred Meyers sculptures, the finest fruits of his WPA labors. They have an endearing, personal strength that is absolutely honest as a coal miners' day is long.

"Pioneer" shows us a frontier type with coonskin, seated as if after a long hunt, a muzzle loader held by the barrel in his left hand. "Hunter" is an old-timer with a weathered walnut smile below a finely trimmed but bushy mustache, a spirited and obviously devoted bird dog arrested with forepaws and nose nuzzling his master's rumpled coat. The right hand is upraised and clenched, as though it should be holding something. Some say "Hunter" once had a gun.

All of them are hardwood heavy, with outsized feet, massively squat legs, strong-thewed, bulked out. His "Lincoln" is a man with a head and features carved almost hurriedly, as though Meyers wanted to on with the business of giving the Great Emancipator a strong, resolute frame, which he did. "Coal Miner" is probably his best; it is pure Coal Miner.

-3- It's Happening

Meyers' brother, Raymond, says he never attempted to sell any of his works, although he was frequently requested to do things on commission. When a West Frankfort acquaintance built a new home, Meyers carved him a fireplace mantel, showing birds in flight.

He was his own man and he was a Southern Illinoisan by birth, choice and determination. An oil company that used to use a dinosaur as a symbol once tried to hire him to carve dinosaurs. He said thanks, but no thanks. He preferred to stay where he was.

A pipe company asked him to join up and teach its carvers how to utilize wood grain. He turned that down too.

He was carving a horse-mounted Indian when the hernia that had always bothered him became strangulated. He died on Feb. 7, 1950.

(Coda: Three days after the foregoing was written, "Woodsman" showed up. Police received an anonymous telephone call that some library books had been stashed on home plate at the SIU baseball diamond. They found, instead, the sculpture. A seated figure, bareheaded, holding an ax. Large hands, timeworn frame, but still muscled. Unmistakably Fred Meyers.)

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --Strict attention to principle will be the watchword at a series of environmental and field ecology workshops coming up this fall at Southern Illinois University's Little Grassy Lake Outdoor Laboratory.

High school students attending the week-long sessions will be cooking their own food, eating it with non-disposable utensils and hauling their used up glass containers to a collection center for recycling.

Even the 3,000 brochures mailed across Illinois announcing the sessions were printed on recycled paper.

Three week-long field ecology workshops will begin Oct. 3 at the lakeside complex, enrollment limited to 20 teenagers in each one. Ninety per cent of the activities will be scheduled in the woods, valleys and beaches beyond the main camp. The emphasis will be on things that make up the environment and their interrelationships.

Field sampling, mapping, identification and field studies of animals will be the main subject fare.

"Man's role in degrading, improving, restoring and maintaining his environment" is scheduled for priority consideration by students who will attend six other workshops starting Oct. 31.

Topics on the agenda range from air, water and noise pollution to wildlife preservation and population.

Students will be challenged to come up with alternative solutions to environmental problems.

Workshoppers will be housed at Camp Oikos, an eight-cabin enclave within the 7,000-acre outdoor Laboratory. Lectures and field sessions will be conducted by Outdoor Laboratory staff members and faculty specialists from SIU at Carbondale.

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --Anyone who expects to be stuffed with football, pro basketball and World Series memories by Oct. 23--take a note:

On that date the second annual U.S. Orienteering Championships will be run at Southern Illinois University's Little Grassy Lake Outdoor Laboratory.

Next note: Orienteering is a form of cross-country running with a big difference. The runners don't get to see the course in advance and have to use a compass and map to complete it.

A major sport in Scandinavia for years, orienteering was introduced to U.S. civilians at an SIU clinic in 1970. Then the first U.S. championships were conducted over rugged Little Grassy Lake terrain last October.

Servicemen and Canadian entries dominated the 1970 event, with the men's Elite championship going to Sgt. Larry Long, a Camp Pendleton (Calif.) Marine.

Andrew Marcec, of the sponsoring SIU Division of Extension and Adult Education, said 300 runners may compete this time, including eight members of the Swedish Orienteering squad.

Nationwide interest in the sport since last year has spurred formation of a U.S. Orienteering Federation, Marcec said. Corporate offices are located in Arlington, Va.

Competition will be in five individual and team classes covering youths, men and women, and experienced runners.

The Elite championship course for experienced orienteers will cover five miles of brambles, woods, rocks, ravines and other topographical variations.

Runners must proceed through marked check-points using a map given them at the start.

Several novice runners got lost in the inaugural championships.

An orienteering clinic and tutoring session is scheduled the evening before. Championship competition will begin at 11:15 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 23.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Sept. --Twenty four students, most of them from Southern and Central Illinois, will be selected next Spring to be the landmark class for the Southern Illinois University School of Medicine.

So said Dean Richard H. Moy as he was host to the SIU board of trustees on a visit to the School's existing facilities in Springfield. The trustees inspected the interim office, the interim Medical Library Building, and viewed the seven-acre site on which construction is expected to start this fall on Phase I of the School of Medicine campus.

Dean Moy told trustees the 24 selected students would start their medical training at the Carbondale campus, "where sophisticated equipment and qualified Ph.D faculty are available to teach the basic courses." These students will start their year-around schooling with the 1972 summer term, he said, transferring to the Springfield campus for their second and third years.

"I expect the medical school you gentlemen as SIU trustees are starting will be the prototype of the next 10 to 15 medical schools in the country," Moy said. "The accreditation committee is well aware of this, and its stamp of approval on our efforts will be a landmark in medical education."

The SIU School will come up for preliminary accreditation in January, 1972.

"By cooperative utilization of the expertise on the Carbondale campus and the facilities of Springfield's two great hospitals with their more than 70 million dollars in physical assets, we have gained five years in time and saved the State of Illinois upwards of 100 million dollars," Moy said.

SIU students working alongside staff members at Springfield Memorial and St. John's hospitals will learn their medicine in the "real world of real hospitals."

"By selecting our students from well-qualified, high-ranking applicants, most of them from central and south Illinois, we hope our graduates will practice medicine in the smaller communities of their origin rather than flocking to the large cities," Moy said. "We expect to have members of minority groups and both sexes in our classes."

Bids will be opened October 5 for the first phase of the medical building, for which Gov. Richard Ogilvie has released $2,760,000 in Illinois Building Authority funds.-30-

CARBONDALE, ILL., Sept. --Job prospects for college graduates haven't brightened as the fall placement interviewing season opens, according to Herall C. Largent, Placement Service director at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale.

"At a meeting of placement directors early this month," Largent said, "I talked with as many of them as possible and none could see any improvement in the picture, although they expressed hope for recouping some of the losses by winter or spring."

At SIU, 34 teams from business and industry plus two from graduate schools have signed up for interview dates during October with SIU prospective graduates, and 41 are registered for November.

The comparable figures last year were 58 in October and 66 in November, and in 1969 the numbers were 93 in October and 109 in November.

Largent said that some 1971 graduates are still landing jobs. "Most of the teaching positions are filled, although a few last-minute vacancies occur due to emergencies such as accidents, illness, pregnancies. We are still getting reports, however, from graduates who have secured jobs with business, industry, social agencies and government."

SIU COUNTRY COLUMN
By Albert Meyer

This year's observance of National Cooperative Month in October center around the theme "Cooperatives Care," says Walter Wills, chairman of the agricultural industries department at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale. Wills is a member of the Illinois Cooperative Coordinating Committee which is planning Cooperative Month observances in the state. It is made up of business and educational leaders in the state under the chairmanship of Dale Butz, secretary of marketing for the Illinois Agricultural Association.

The month's activities emphasize a collection of goals built around the pledge of the nation's farm cooperatives to provide a better life in the 70's for members and non-members alike. Here are some of the Cooperative Month points of attention for the country's cooperatives.

--Give greater service to all persons, regardless of where they live, and more attention to solving pollution problems and improving environmental quality.

--Intensify efforts by cooperatives and their members to encourage participation in community and civic affairs and to help improve the quality of life.

--Support efforts to attract more industry to provide a more balanced economy in rural and urban areas.

--Step up efforts to attract more young persons for service on the boards of director of cooperatives, and to promote special youth programs in the area.

--Help improve the educational and cultural facilities and opportunities in the communities.

--Find new uses for farm products and help farmers achieve more adequate incomes.

--Improve housing and promote better nutrition for all families.

Cooperatives in Illinois rank fourth in total business volume behind California, Minnesota, and Iowa. The state's cooperatives did more than a billion dollars worth of business in 1969-70 fiscal year. The 300 marketing cooperatives accounted for about $850 million of the business; the 160 farm supply cooperatives another $220 millions; and the 600 related service cooperatives--electric, telephone, consumer goods, insurance, animal health and breeding services--added nearly $16 million. Last year the state had more than 1,000 cooperatives and over 600,000 individual members.

CARBONDALE, ILL., Oct. --Simple arithmetic explains the financial dilemma confronting Southern Illinois University.

Take a state appropriations operating budget that is four million dollars less than last year, add new university commitments--medical, dental and nursing schools--of three million dollars for this year, and you come up with an approximate seven million dollar gap between what comes in and what University officials had expected to budget for fiscal 1971-72.

Even though the state legislature is asked at its current session to release the University's anticipated additional income from a tuition increase, officials agree it will not span the seven million dollar gap. For one thing, the earned income will be less than anticipated. Enrollments are down at Illinois universities and the SIU trustees declared a moratorium for the fall quarter on a scheduled tuition increase. This would reduce the increase in tuition receipts from more than four million to a maximum of 2.8 million dollars, according to board accountants.

Faced with this imbalance on the eve of starting classes for the fall quarter--the final SIU appropriation figure of 77.5 million was not announced until mid July--the presidents of both SIU campuses announced stringent economy measures.

At Carbondale, reductions in work force have been ordered by President Robert G. Layer as the institution seeks to adjust to the budget deficiency. Student work and graduate assistant funds have been cut, and a freeze prohibits replacement of faculty and staff employees who resign or retire.

The cutback in operating budget has had a double impact on the University's physical plant. "Not only has our own budget been cut," says Anthony Blass, director, "but our income from service charges against other departments has fallen off. Faced with their own budget cuts, the departments are authorizing only emergency repairs."

-2- Austerity

Layoff of hourly workers is hoped to be only temporary, Blass said, and callback will be as soon as possible and on a seniority basis.

Compounding the reduced budget problem for the Physical Plant are substantial rate increases for water, sewer, coal, and electricity, plus an increase of approximately 300,000 square feet of floor space in new and leased buildings which must be maintained, all without any increase in allocated funds.

"It's a bleak picture for the immediate future," said Frank Hartman, director of personnel. "We are making every effort to spread the effect as evenly as possible."

CARBONDALE, ILL., Oct. --Career education is where it's at these days for the college student.

That's what the twin indicators of enrollment and placement are pointing to nationwide--and the trend is showing up at the Southern Illinois University Vocational-Technical Institute.

Across the board, about 40 per cent of this year's college graduates with crisp new bachelor's degrees still haven't found work in their fields, according to the U.S. Office of Education, while 85 per cent with less than a bachelor's degree in college-level occupational--or vocational-technical--fields found employment in the areas for which they trained.

VTI graduates have bettered even that rosy job picture, with virtually all the 486 who earned associate degrees in 1971 at work or pursuing a planned education program.

And while enrollment figures just released show a drop of more than six per cent in Illinois universities from last fall, VTI is down less than one per cent to 1,276 this year.

"The trend to career education is going to show an even sharper increase," says VTI Dean Arden L. Pratt. "Most jobs opening in the next decade will require post-secondary training, but not a four-year degree. That fact of life, along with the economics of paying for a college education, will cause an influx of young people who want to get into a program that will prepare them to go to work and get them out so that they can get started making a living."

VTI, which offers associate degree programs in 22 fields ranging from aviation technology to mortuary science and electronic data processing, is the only university-connected school of its type in the state. Its students come from more than a score of other states and half a dozen foreign nations as well as from all over Illinois. Quality--of instruction, equipment and reputation--seems to be the drawing card. In a student survey last spring, 862 of 1025 respondents said they would choose VTI over other schools offering identical programs

VTI, like other schools offering occupational education, measures its effectiveness by the success of its graduates in the job market. Despite the current economic decline and tight employment picture, returns this year have been as good as ever.

Don Hertz, supervisor of the program in mortuary science and funeral service, reports three job offers for each of his 18 graduates.

In automotive technology, supervisor L.D. Willey says he "could place five or ten people for every one of the 46 graduates this year." Salary depends on where the graduate goes and how good he is, but average starting pay runs about $700 a month, Willey says. About half of those completing the associate-degree program continue at SIU to earn the bachelor's degree in technical and industrial education, he points out, and more than 50 high schools and junior colleges in the state have automotive instructors who began their study at VTI.

Salaries are up about $100 a month to an average of $735 for this year's electronics technology graduates, reports supervisor Paul Caldwell. Each of the 26 completing the two-year program "had three or four hot job prospects," he said, but about half chose to go on to school in teacher education.

Jobs were a little harder to find for this year's 47 graduates in data processing, reports supervisor James Robb, but those who sought work found it at salaries averaging $610 a month and ranging up to $800 for capable students with some work experience. About a quarter of the data processing graduates go on to earn bachelor's degrees--a few in teaching, but most in accounting, management and finance.

Even with an influx of returning service-trained veterans into an industry that's doing quite a bit of belt-tightening, supervisor E.A. DaRosa reported jobs for all the 52 graduates of aviation technology who were looking. Some, trained as pilots, had to step down to flight engineer or maintenance positions, but they're still averaging $12,000 a year to start. Some graduates who had been aiming for the major airlines went into general aviation, and perhaps more than had planned to continue at SIU in teacher education, but even there prospects are bright with more high schools and junior colleges offering aviation courses and needing instructors for them.

In commercial art, dental hygiene, business and secretarial programs, corrections and law enforcement, tool and manufacturing technology and throughout VTI, faculty members report similar feed-back from the 1971 graduates.

The consensus is that good students can still pretty well pick and choose. Those with poorer records have to scratch harder, but the jobs are there.

THE BOARD WANTS MORE INFORMATION ON PARKING AND CAMPUS MASTER-PLANNING BEFORE RENOVATING THE EXISTING MCANDREW STADIUM... OR BUILDING A NEW ONE. PRESIDENT ROBERT G. CARBONDALE, ILL., Oct. --A school lesson guide designed to inform youth on the effects of drug use and driving has been developed by a Southern Illinois University graduate student.

John W. Hogan of Springfield, Mass. (87 Belle St.) prepared the teaching guide as part of a master's degree thesis in health education. He received a bachelor's degree from SIU at Carbondale in 1970.

The plan is a one-week course covering stimulants, depressants, hallucinogens, antihistamines, narcotics and tranquilizers.

Hogan says it is the first such school study plan set up to let driver and traffic educators spell out the effects of drugs on driving behavior. Teacher's guides on the physiological effects of drug abuse are relatively new, he says.

Hogan's guide describes effects of drugs on drivers and categorizes them both by pharmaceutical and slang terms.

A section on "What Drugs May do to Your Driving" includes information on prescription uses, direct effects, possible side effects, causes of side effects, the combination effects of drugs and alcohol, and driving recommendations.

A lexicon of drug definitions include entries from "A Bomb" (marijuana and heroin smoked in combination) to "Zigzag" (a brand of cigarette paper treated with flavors).

CARBONDALE, ILL., Feb. --"Unique" was the description applied by the visitor from England after viewing the wood sculptures on display pedestals in the Morris Library at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale.

The visitor had more than a passing interest, for he was a relative-by-marriage of the untutored artist who created the carvings back in the 1930's.

Raymond Myers, brother of the sculptor Fred Myers, and Mrs. Myers brought the young man from England to the campus to see the approximately 25 polished figures of men and beast which the former Southern Illinois coal miner fashioned from green walnut stumps while working for the SIU Museum under a WPA program during the years of the Great Depression.

Their guest was Kingsley Layton from Luton, Bedfordshire, England, nephew of Mrs. Myers. The Myers' son, Paul, also accompanied the party on the visit to the Morris Library and the Museum, where the greater number of the Fred Myers' carvings are kept.

Raymond Myers said he has one of his brother's sculptures of human figures, that of Ulysses S. Grant on horseback. Another, "The Coal Miner," from the Museum collection, is currently on tour with a traveling exhibit sponsored by the Illinois Arts Council.

On permanent display in the Morris Library are "Pioneer," "Woodsman" and "Hunter," in a corridor, and "Abraham Lincoln" at the entrance to the American Heritage Room.

Early last fall "Pioneer" and "Woodsman" disappeared one night, throwing Library, Museum and Security Policy into a campus wide search. Both were recovered within a few days.

At the Museum laboratory the remainder of the Myers' works are stored and exhibited from time to time--dinosaurs, reptiles, birds, a series representing the evolution of the horse, and his statue of the aristocratic Thomas Jefferson.

Fred Myers as a child displayed a natural gift for drawing and later painted in oils, though he never received any training in art, his brother said. He went to work in the coal mines after two years in high school, but the depression of the 1930's found him jobless. With money scarce for art materials, he began to carve objects out of wood, using a heavy ax and a pocket knife as his principal tools.

When the SIU Museum received funds from the WPA Federal Arts Project, Myers got a job helping develop dioramas of nature and historical scenes for Museum exhibits. The late John Allen, then Museum curator, observed his skill with wood, and suggested that he carve the figures rather than mold them in plaster or papier mache.

Myers had developed his own unique technique of wood sculpture--preserving and utilizing the burls and grains of the wood to enhance his concept, and then rubbing the finished piece with linseed oil and burnishing it with wax.

His figures of the American laboring man--the hunter, the pioneer, the woodsman, the coal miner--and the American heroes carry a feeling of strength and purpose and individuality that make them "come alive" and almost breathe.

Raymond Myers said that even while working for the Museum, Fred did most of his carving at his little home at Freeman Spur (between Herrin and West Frankfort, Ill.). There friends would bring him the green walnut stumps that he preferred to work with, although he did some pieces from cherry. He turned down offers to carve or teach carving for industry, or to wood-sculpt on commission, and chose to remain and do "his own thing" in his native Southern Illinois.

"We wanted him to come live with us," his brother said, "but he wanted to stay at his own place." The Raymond Myers live near Mt. Vernon (R.R. 6).

The wood scuptor was at work on the figure of an American Indian mounted on his horse when death came in 1950, the result of a strangulated hernia. He was only 40--still an artist and still "his own man."

Cutbacks in two areas under Auxiliary and Service Enterprises at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale have been announced by Director Carlton F. Rasche.

Rasche said operations will be curtailed at the University Laundry effective Monday (Feb. 14) because of a tremendous decline in volume, and in Reproduction Service effective March 1, primarily because lack of state allocations to departments has cut demand for this type of work.

He said all 24 laundry employes would be retained but that 19 of them would be cut back to three days a week.

Reassignments will be sought for ten workers affected by the Reproduction Services cutback, he said.

Rasche said "we want to remain alert to any changes in the situation and if conditions change, we are going to change with them. It would be wonderful news if we find we can return to normal operations." He said Auxiliary and Service Enterprises is not out to make a profit, but to break even in providing needed services.

He said decline in laundry volume has resulted in a great loss in revenue, chiefly because of reduction in the number of persons in University residence halls and because there has been a switch in many places from cotton goods, which went to the laundry, to paper products use for cleaning. He said also that some University departments are no longer furnishing the uniforms for personnel, thus the people are cleaning their own.

Under the new setup, the laundry will operate with full force three days a week with only five persons working Mondays and Fridays when laundry equipment will be idle.

Rasche said the Reproduction Services cutback includes five in printing and five in the secretarial and duplicating unit.

He explained that in any curtailment of operations, Auxiliary and Service Enterprises will work within the framework of the University, Civil Service, and union contracts when they are involved, regarding personnel to be affected.

"We are trying to take care of these matters in the most humane and moral way we can," he said. "It's not easy, and we are exploring all avenues for possible reassignment of individuals involved in layoffs."

CARBONDALE, ILL., March --Four suitcases and valises full of significant historical papers covering the Mexican Revolution era (1910-1920) were brought to the Morris Library at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale by A. W. Bork, director of the SIU Latin-American Institute.

These were the private papers and correspondence of Francisco Vazquez Gomez, vice president of Mexico under Francisco I. Madero in 1910 and later minister of public instruction in the cabinet of Porfirio Diaz.

All are arranged chronologically and supported by collateral material, assembled painstakingly by Vazquez Gomez' son, Ignacio Vazquez Gomez, who died Dec. 16, 1971 at Guadalajara, victim of a heart attack.

SIU's inheritance of these papers reads like a story.

Bork recounts that it was in the summer of 1958, when he was attending a scholarly meeting in Mexico City, that he encountered by accident "A Mexican gentleman apparently in his late fifties," who introduced himself as the son of the revolutionary leader.

"He said that he was writing a study of the philosophy and ideology of the early period of the Revolution during which his father was so prominent," Bork recalls.

"As we conversed Don Ignacio told me that he had his father's private papers and correspondence and that when he finished with them one of his problems was to find a place outside of Mexico where they might be placed for safe keeping and use by researchers of whatever nationality who might be interested in them. He then asked me whether SIU might not be desirous of serving in that capacity as a depositor. I told him that we most certainly would be.

"That was the beginning of 13 years of correspondence and exchange of ideas, which brought about the delivery of parts of the collection to me for delivery to the Morris Library."

The latest installment Professor Bork obtained from Gomez' widow, Mrs. Lilyann A. Porter de Bawquez Gomez, who lives in Guadalajara.

Still in Senora Gomez' possession are chiefly 35 mm. copies of newspaper articles and a microfilm copy of the Revolutionary-period newspaper, La Nueva Era, all of which she has promised to SIU.

The original manuscript material and correspondence in the Gomez papers include a vast number of letters bearing the signatures of the principal political figures of the Revolutionary period, as well as original or certified copies of state agreements and declarations.

Reflected in the papers are the controversies which arose within the ranks of the revolutionary movement and which caused a breech between Don Francisco and his brother Emilio Vazquez Gomez and other leading personalities.

It was Don Ignacio's purpose to bring together as extensive and detailed a collection of materials as possible to serve "future historians as the source for a dispassionate judgment concerning the role played by the various persons involved," Bork explained. "Of course his hope was that some unprejudiced writer might eventually find that Don Francisco was correct in his estimate of the situation and justified in the stand that he took in a lost cause."

Bork cited "the great contribution" of Senora Gomez to the work of gathering the materials for the collection. A successful business woman (a dietitian and founder of the famous Hunza House in Escondido, Calif.), she has financed to a great extent the research work of her husband.

The SIU Latin American Institute has started preparation of a calendar of the Gomez papers for publication, Bork said.

CARBONDALE, ILL., June --In recognition of the 92nd anniversary of the birth of England's Poet Laureate John Masefield, born June 1, 1878, Corliss Lamont, American author, humanist and civil liberties leader, has presented a photo-copy collection of Masefield's letters to the Morris Library at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale.

The two volumes include about 150 letters Masefield wrote to Lamont over a period of 40 years.

SIU's Special Collections contain a small collection of original Masefield letters and more than 50 American and British first editions of his books, according to Kenneth W. Duckett, curator of the collections.

Masefield, who died in 1967, not only wrote poetry, publishing some 30 volumes, but also wrote plays, fiction, critical works, biographies and miscellaneous books.

Lamont, an honor graduate of Harvard with a Ph.D. from Columbia University, taught at Columbia, the New School for Social Research, Cornell, and Harvard's Graduate School of Education.

From 1932 to 1954 he was director of the American Civil Liberties Union, was a 1952 American Labor Party candidate for the U.S. Senate, and in 1956 was the recipient of the New York City Teachers Union annual award.

He is the author of numerous books including "Issues of Immortality," "You Might Like Socialism: A Way of Life for Modern Man," "The Peoples of the Soviet Union," "Humanism as a Philosophy," "The Independent Mind," and "Soviet Civilization." He also has edited a number of volumes on education, metaphysics and philosophy, is a frequent contributor to periodicals, and is a radio and television speaker.

CARBONDALE, ILL., July --More than a score of scholars and writers from around the world, in search of untouched sources for new books, have come to Southern Illinois University at Carbondale in recent months to use literary and historical materials in the Special Collections division of the Morris Library.

A Russian professor from Moscow spent a few days examining letters and documents relating to Ernest Hemingway.

A Nebraska scholar, writing a book on the Mexican revolution, is doing his major research in the recently acquired papers of Francisco Vazquez Gomez, revolutionary leader and vice president in Madero's regime.

Although a comparative newcomer in the rare book field, SIU in the last 15 years has accumulated notable collections of manuscripts, typescripts, letters and variant editions, particularly emphasizing 20th century literary figures, which make it a mecca for researchers, according to David Koch, rare book librarian.

Some of its collections--that on James Joyce, the holdings on the Irish literary renaissance, and a large volume on the American and British ex-patriate writers and publishers of the 1920's--"rank with the best," Koch said.

A New York writer came to SIU to research the Joyce materials. Four persons--two from Ireland, one each from Kentucky and Canada--worked in the William Butler Yeats collection, and seven others--two from Ireland, two from Canada, one each from Ohio, New Mexico and Minnesota, delved into other facets of the University's Irish holdings.

The papers and correspondence of Theodore A. Schroeder, U.S. constitutional lawyer and Free Speech League co-founder, attracted a scholar from Boston. A Florida man was interested in the artist Salvador Dali. A Yale scholar has explored the papers and collected works of Henry Nelson Wieman, American theologian and philosopher, who retired in 1966 after 10 years as distinguished visiting professor at SIU.

The collections of course are used extensively by SIU Faculty and graduate students as source materials for articles, books and doctoral dissertations, Koch said. -lj-

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS UNIVERSITY AT CARBONDALE

Carbondale, Illinois 62901

CARBONDALE, ILL., Nov. -- A five-year project to maintain home-lines communication with service men has been officially closed, and its records presented to the Archives of the Morris Library at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, according to Kenneth Duckett, archivist.

"H.O.M.E." Was initiated in 1967 by Mrs. A. Frank Bridges of Carbondale, who was concerned about the young men of the community who had enlisted or been drafted to serve in Vietnam. The initials stand for "Honor Our Men's Efforts."

She recruited a small group, most of them mothers of service men, who undertook to mail to each man a bi-weekly newsletter to keep him informed about the latest news at home--written from an unbiased point of view and with a sense of humor.

As the number of men serving overseas increased, the self-appointed committee--Mrs. N.L. Harris, Mrs. Carl Kiefer, Mrs. R.L. Safriet, Mrs. Martha Busch, and Mrs. Bridges--sought and received the support of other individuals and civic and social groups. Starting in 1968 a Christmas package was mailed to each serviceman overseas.

At the peak of the conflict, the mailings reached 250, then by the spring of 1965 the number dwindled to approximately 25, with most of the addressees serving in Germany.

The group also sent letters and telegrams to families of those injured or hospitalized.

Along with histories of the project written by the committee, the files turned over to the Morris Library include a complete set of the newsletters, financial records, summaries of meetings, clippings, and three boxes of replies from the recipients.

Mrs. Bridges said the group embarked on the project "in response to what they believed was an apathetic reaction on the part of most people to the existence of the undeclared war in Vietnam. They expressed neither support nor objection to the war, but shared a belief that they should do something to show their respect for the men and women serving in the armed forces." The first newsletter was mailed May 9, 1967, and the last May 10, 1972.
